Henriksen, six others join interiors firm

Wimberly Interiors has added to its leadership ranks as part of its ongoing global expansion. In all, the interior design firm announced the hiring of seven individuals at its studios in Singapore, London, Los Angeles and Honolulu. (The firm also has an office in New York.)

Terry Henriksen has been appointed studio director in Singapore. He previously served as director of Gold Mantis, president of Henriksen Design and partner at Hirsch Bedner Associates. "Terry is one of the rare breed of designers who can not only impress clients with truly unique design solutions, but he effortlessly translates his imaginative designs into reality," said Margaret McMahon, managing director of Wimberly Interiors, a unit of design firm WATG. "I am particularly impressed by the stunning sketch renderings he produces to articulate his vision."

Also joining Henriksen at the Singapore studio is Tomoko Day, as design director. She has developed a signature aesthetic that blends her passion for pottery, textile design and photography, the company said. Day worked with Henriksen at Gold Mantis and Henriksen Design, and her career also includes stints at Barry Design Associates and SFA Design.

Other new hires include Mark James as senior associate at the London studio and Tim Zebrowski as creative director in the Los Angeles studio. New hires at the Honolulu studio include Ralf Sebecke, creative director; Ari Suryanto, senior designer; and Shaleah Soliven, designer.
